Roof rats: 'Universal' complaints heard from Upland neighborhoods

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

When Ann Baker's son caught a young rat on her kitchen table, she knew she had a problem.

Baker, who lives in a comfortable home north of 23rd Street in Upland, is not alone in finding rats or signs of rats in and around her house.

"I would say Upland has always been just about one of the highest areas in the county with reports of rats," said county vector biologist Joyce Maggard. "Rats also seem to have a very distinct migration pattern — we're getting complaints from a broader area than we were a year ago."

She said most of the complaints last year were in an area bordered by Foothill Boulevard and 20th Street, and Euclid and Mountain avenues.

"It looks like a completely universal complaint now," she said. "We're also hearing from areas to the east, west, and north to the (San Antonio) Heights. And we've always gotten calls from the southern portion of the city."

The roof rats, which grow up to eight inches in length not including the tail, are attracted by the heavy growth of ivy used to landscape many homes, fruit trees and pet food left outside overnight. The local rat is a crossbreed of three subspecies of "Rattus rattus" which has shown remarkable adaptability to the suburban environment.

Twyla Mowery, an Upland resident who has led a citizens' battle against the rodents, said the biggest difficulty has been getting people to admit they have a problem so the proper steps may be taken.

"We have stories of people finding rats behind their dishwashers, their sofas," she said. "These are beautiful homes, and people are embarrassed to admit they have a problem. They don't want to let people know."

The Bakers first realized they had a problem last year when a bowl of pomegranates on the kitchen table kept receiving mysterious punctures in the fruit.

"I accused the kids of poking holes with a protractor or something while they were on the phone," recalled Baker, "but we finally realized something was in the house. I got rid of the fruit."

Then one evening, she came home from a meeting to find a fast-food serving box on the middle of the table, where the pomegranates had been. There was a rat in the box.

"I figured he must have gotten in through the chimney — we had left the damper on the fireplace open," said Baker. "My son set a trap with sticky, sweet prunes. He had the rat by the next morning."

That incident took place about a year ago, and the Bakers haven't had any trouble since. But many of their neighbors have.

"A lot of people have a rat problem but don't recognize it," said Maggard. "They blame it on birds, or something else."

As the area's vector biologist, she answers complaints with a visit to the home, and makes recommendations based on the signs she finds.

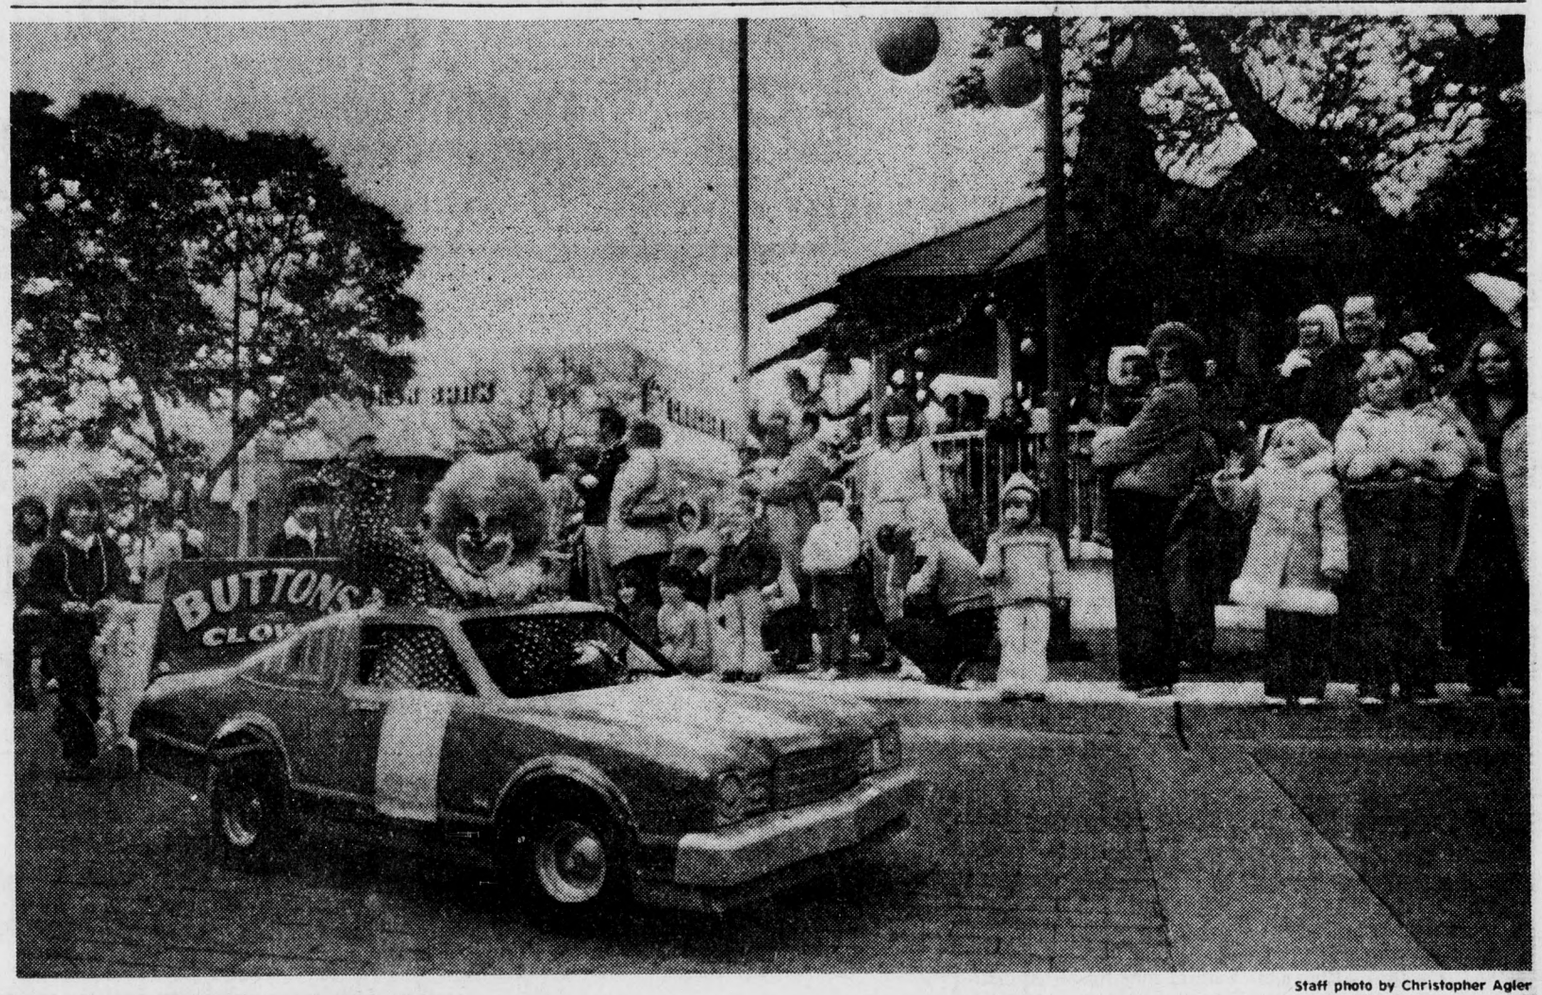

In most cases, the rats present must first be killed, and then the source of their food cleaned up to prevent others from migrating into the area.

Rat bait using an anti-coagulant poison is available commercially, but must be used according to directions with repeated doses. If not, the rat may become ill, but can build up an immunity that is passed along to future generations.

Upland City Manager Lee Travers said a brochure instructing city residents what to do about rats will probably be available by the end of next week.

"It's mostly a self-help situation," he said. "The rat control program in Ontario can only be a demonstration to show how it can be done. In the target area in Ontario, they've found the rats move back in if people don't keep up preventive measures."

Residents can help make their homes less desirable to rats by cleaning up rubbish and wood piles, weeds, heavy growths of ivy and by closing any holes to the roof or basement area.

McElwain named to county post

Cal McElwain has been named interim vice chairman of the county Board of Supervisors.

McElwain was the unanimous choice of the new board, which met for the first time last week. His selection came after the board picked Supervisor Bob Hammock as chairman.

Hammock had previously served as vice chairman and his elevation created the opening for the post. Both selections were described as interim and will be subject to reaffirmation when the board formally reorganizes in January.

McElwain, whose district includes Upland, Rancho Cucamonga and part of Ontario, was elected to the seat representing the second district in 1978. During his time on the board, Hammock has served as vice chairman and James Mayfield, who left the board Monday after not seeking re-election, has been chairman.

In other action Monday, the board turned to John Quimby, 45, to serve as Sacramento lobbyist for San Bernardino County. Quimby served as an assemblyman for 12 years before losing to Terry Goggin, D-66th District, in 1974 after reapportionment.

He has worked in Sacramento as a lobbyist since 1977 and will phase out his relationship with current clients to exclusively serve the county.

Depending on final negotiations with the county on fringe benefits, his contract was estimated to bring an annual salary of $35,000 to $42,000.

He will shortly replace Steve Franks, who retired five months ago after serving as the county's lobbyist for 10 years.

Search to find new board member

Chaffey trustees query applicants

By JIM MARXEN
Staff Writer

Seven applicants for a seat on the Chaffey Joint Union High School District board of education were queried by board members Monday night but it could be up to 30 days before anyone knows who the new member will be.

The seven turned in applications for the vacancy prior to a deadline last Friday. One of them will be selected to complete the remaining year of former board president G.A. Chalfant's term.

Chalfant resigned from the board last month for business reasons.

Questions from board members varied. Applicants were asked about their educational and vocational backgrounds, the responsibilities of a school board member, programs the applicant would cut if financial difficulties appear, the relationship between a board member and district employees, teacher strikes and types of programs the applicant favored.

Each candidate was interviewed for 15 minutes.

Those being considered for the post include:

— Herman D. Lackie, an Ontario resident and a quality assurance specialist with General Dynamics. Lackie said he has served on advisory committees in school districts and has become involved with local scout programs. He said he wanted to insure the district maintains a high rating in California.

— James Banks Jr., who gave an Upland address. Banks is a 1960 Chaffey High School graduate and is now an attorney. He is a former teacher at several local schools including Cal Poly Pomona and Mt. San Antonio College. He said more emphasis should be placed on basic education and he stressed discipline on campus.

— Jack W. Dillon, an Ontario resident who is also a Chaffey High School graduate. He is currently employed as an assistant general manager with the Vortex Company of Claremont. He said he wanted to represent the South Ontario area where he lives and that he is active in several youth activities including baseball and high school band.

— Lilas McPherson, also an Ontario resident and a previous candidate for a seat on the board. She listed several district committees upon which she has served including the Chaffey High School Advisory Board and the District Administration Evaluation Committee. Financial problems are one of her key concerns. She listed her occupation as a nurse and a housewife.

— Gerald W. Wolf, of Montclair is owner of an Upland-based investment firm. He currently is a member of a school board in a private school in Claremont. He is also on the school site committee at Montclair High School. He said he was interested in being on the board to reciprocate for the education the district provided his children.

— Gustavos Ramos Jr., an Ontario resident, also said he wanted to become a board member to serve the community. He expressed a concern over the education of the area's youth.

— Judy Rayner, of Rancho Cucamonga, employed in retail marketing, said she believed in a "traditional" school system and is aware of the trends that are changing education. She has been involved watching the developments of the Master Plan for California's Children and Youth and has attended the state conference on families as well as workshops on education.

Fusion power nears

By BOB CORBETT
Copley News Service

Scientists may be able to tap fusion power, the energy process that lights the stars, far sooner than expected — perhaps as early as the year 2000.

Experts in the field feel that the scientific problems of harnessing this powerful energy source have been solved, Dr. Nicholas Krall said, and only engineering problems remain.

"This energy source might be developed sooner than thought," according to Krall.

The newfound enthusiasm stems not only from scientific progress but rekindled interest in fusion by the federal government, he said.

He referred to the recently passed Energy Bill of 1980 that will back the scientific gambit on fusion with billions of dollars in the next 20 years.

"This is one of those rare programs," Krall said, "that has not been limited by ideas but by money."

Krall made his remarks during an interview. He is a vice president of Jaycor, an energy firm.

Fusion is a process that produces enormous amounts of energy by forcing atoms together, rather than splitting them, as is done in current nuclear power plants.

It has been estimated that there is enough fusion fuel in the sea — in the form of heavy hydrogen called deuterium — to serve the Earth's energy needs for the lifetime of the planet, about 5 billion years.

Scientists, Krall said, are encouraged not only by new government support but by the progress toward fusion being made on several fronts.

The fusion process is not easy to contain, Krall explained.

It requires magnetic fields able to contain temperatures of 100 million degrees Celsius, particle densities of 100 trillion per cubic centimeter for long enough — a few seconds will do — for the fusion reaction to take place.

This is the way that stars like the sun convert elements like hydrogen into all the elements that exist and provide the light that makes life possible on a planet like Earth.

There is a whole series of scientific approaches that now suggests this process can be reproduced in energy - producing plants here on Earth, Krall said.

He mentioned, for example, the tokamak devices that confine the process with magnetic fields of varying kinds, mirror systems that bounce energetic subatomic particles around in a systematic manner that keeps them under control, and arrays of laser beams that actually force tiny pellets of atomic fuel to implode or burst inward.

All of these processes are making remarkable progress, according to Krall, and spur hopes that fusion power will become a reality by the turn of the century.

Retirees plan trip

The residents of Rancho Park Retirement Home in San Dimas have planned a trip to Lawry's and the Southwest Museum in Los Angeles on Friday and an excursion to the Tournament of Roses parade on New Year's Day.

A bus is scheduled to leave the retirement center at 7 a.m. on New Year's Day for the Tournament of Roses parade in Pasadena. The bus is expected to return to the park at noon. Cost for reserved seating on Colorado Boulevard and transportation is $20 per person.

Auxiliary presents $5,000 check

A check for $5,000 toward payment of a $50,000 pledge was presented recently to Foothill Presbyterian Hospital of Glendora by the hospital auxiliary.

Mrs. Max Clark, president-elect of the auxiliary, made the presentation at the annual Christmas tea to Leoard Ray, chairman of the board of directors of the hospital.

The money was raised by the auxiliary from its annual home tour in the fall, said Mrs. Clark.

"In two years the auxiliary has donated $35,000 to the hospital," Mrs. Clark told the women attending the fete in Bidwell Forum at Glendora Library.

Highlight of the tea was a fashion show featuring the latest in ski wear and equipment by Sarcas Ski and Sport shop of La Verne.

"Community Appreciation Dance"

The San Dimas High School jazz band will sponsor a "Community Appreciation Dance" Saturday, Dec. 20, from 7 to 11 p.m. in the Stanley Plummer Community Building, 245 E. Bonita Ave.

Genetic engineering rises above horror-story

By BOB CORBETT
Copley News Service

Recombinant DNA, the genetic engineering involving the very substance of life, a few short years ago was a bugaboo phrase that conjured up pictures of deadly viruses spreading wildly and countless clones of Hitlerian monsters.

Now the products of recombinant DNA experimentation have reached the brink of scientific and economic respectability.

The Frankenstein mask has been dropped for the white gowns of university laboratories and the vested suits of Wall Street.

Although still more than cautious, scientists have lost their inordinate fear of the new techniques that allow them to peer into and tinker with the basic genetic machinery of life.

The potential of the new techniques is great, they argue, and outweighs any dangers — dangers they believe they can control.

Businessmen have not been far behind. There are more than 20 firms, many backed by major pharmaceutical companies, eager to cash in on the growing number of important medical products that can be manufactured by recombinant-DBA techniques.

These products and the ability to produce them in pure and human form are among the most exciting advances in medical science. They include such items as insulin and somatostatin, brain hormones important in the control of diabetes, human growth hormone, and interferon, now being tested as a potentially vital chemical in the long struggle against cancer.

One such firm, Genentech Corp. of San Francisco, went public recently with a million - share offering of common stock. A Genetech official said that the stocks never reached the general public. The entire offering was bought up by two brokerage firms at an average price of $30 a share — making the offering worth $30 million.

The enthusiasm of the investors, however, falls far short of the scientific interest. Researchers around the world believe they have found a new tool in recombinant DNA that will allow them to attack in new ways a whole set of problems.

Some of these are new, some old. Some are esoteric, some mundane. They range from new approaches of how to combat cancer to how to improve agricultural production and even to the age-old mariner's problem of how to prevent the fouling of his ship's bottom by sea growth. The latter is of no little importance to the U.S. Navy.

The potential of the recombinant-DNA research was the subject of a recent edition of Science, the official journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the nation's largest scientific organization.

Two of the contributors—Dr. Melvin Simon and Dr. Michael Silverman — explained in a recent interview the excitement, tempered by experience, that scientists feel toward the recombinant-DNA techniques.

Silverman linkened the DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) molecule to a library that contains all the volumes necessary to govern the growth and development of a living cell. In short, the DNA molecule represents the genetic heritage of the cell, developed over millions of years of evolution.

The DNA molecule, he explained, is composed of a series of genes, coded messages that eventually tell the cell just how it is gowing to grow, what kind of cell it will become and how it will function.

The genes are composed of hundreds of chemical subunits called nucleotides. The sequence of these nucleotides determines the gene's code of behavior.

The recombinant-DNA techniques being used now usually deal with viral or bacterial genes, units that contain a few thousand nucleotides, Silverman said. The human DNA, by contrast, involves millions of such nucleotides.

This is the complexity of Silverman's "library." The wonder is that the scientists have cracked that library. It is now open to investigation.

The great hope, the scientists said, is that the recombinant-DN techniques will allow them to identify individual genes, analyze them chemically and charter their structure. Along with another newfound ability, the art of cloning cells — making carbon copies of them — the new techniques provide powerful probes into the processes of life.

"We know the words," Silverman said, "but we still don't undertand how the words are put together to make sentences, to make the whole story of life."

These techniques are permitting scientists to zero in on the basic processes of life. Simon carried the library analogy further.

Researchers are to the point, he said, that of all the books in the DNA library "we are now able to take out one of those books." The cloning ability, he added, allows the scientists to "Xerox" that information and make thousands of copies.

In short, the techniques provide the scientists with a newfound control over a very complex system. Instead of being a simple borrower, the scientists said, researchers are now in the position of assuming the functions of the librarian.

This opens up whole new vistas, according to the scientists. They can now check out a particular volume, take one page out of the volume, rewrite it and insert it back into the book.

And yet, the scientists are saying, "We've only just begun." Asked to rate the potential of recombinant - DNA research on a scale of one to 10, Simon said, "We're about point-2 (0.2 percent)."

Silverman was more poetic. "there are many treasures in the library that we haven't read yet," he said.

Fire insurance benefits should start within days

With Southern California brush fires making hundreds homeless, what can you expect from your insurance company if a fire or other disaster destroys your home and puts you on the street with just the clothes on your back? How soon? How much?

While fire victims will be dealing with their own insurance agents, brokers or company representatives, the Insurance Information Institute says these answers would generally apply for most insurance companies.

In a catastrophe such as the Southern California brush fires, all companies make special efforts with additional personnel to expedite service to policyholders, usually taking the hardship cases first.

If you have insurance on the contents of your home you get an advance payment as fast as your agent / broker or company representative can get it to you. If you keep the insurance people informed on where you are, ou will be helped within hours, or a day or two at the most.

You'll get "additional living expenses" under the homeowners - type policy, for the dwelling owner or for an insured apartment tenant, or even under some of the straight fire and extended coverage policies. This expense allowance is paid on an as-needed basis to make up for the greater costs you have living in your normal fashion of your own home. The maximum total amount is usually up to 20 percent of the face falue of your homeowners policy on the structure of your home — if that much is needed. Be certain to keep your receipted hotel or motel bills in order to provide documentation for "additional living expense" coverage.

Coverage for contents of your home is usually provided in an homeowners policy up to one half the insured value of the home itself, except for very large policy amounts where it may be less. There are usually specific limits on the insured value of special items such as expensive furs, jewelry and art collections. Most people buy extra insurance on these.

If the homeowner and the insurance company representative can come to a quick agreement on the dollar figure for the structure and contents, and how much additional living expenses will be required before the home owner can move back into his own place, a check for the entire amount can often be issued in a day or two.

However, too great haste in filing a claim is frequently not in the best interest of the policy buyer. Most people have to give some study to remembering all of the items they had in their homes and appurenant structures. And insurance companies have the right to seek substantiation of claims. They do this particularly when a claim does not seem to "fit" the living standard of the claimant, such as claiming five expensive TV sets in a destroyed smaller home.

Other coverage included in the usual homeowner package is provision for the sometimes costly expense of clearing debris from your lot prior to rebuilding. Also included is coverage of up to five percent of the face value of the policy to compensate for loss of trees, plants and shrubs lost in the fire.

As to how much the policyholder will receive, it depends on how much insurance he bought on his home and whether he has kept this insurance up to date with inflation in rebuilding costs. Generally, if a structure (excluding the land) is insured for an amount of 80 percent or more of its replacement cost at the time of the loss, the company will pay full replacement cost on a partial loss or the face value of the policy on a totally destroyed home.

By far the vast majority of home fires result in only partial damage to the structure. Generally, therefore, it makes sound economic sense for the home owner to take advantage of the lower insurance cost available by insuring to 80 percent of replacement cost, knowing that the cost of restoring the partial damage will be entirely paid for by insurance.

When there is a total loss, however, the policyholder will receive the face value of the policy.

The three-act drama narrates the traditional story of Christ's birth in a new way. It is a retelling of the event after two years and includes a fourth maji, Artibon, who is searching for the special child born to be King of the Jews.

The action takes place inside the church sanctuary and in the adjacent outdoor area where mounted Roman soldiers, wisemen on horses and pilgrims will cross the grounds to Bethlehem. Live animals will be a part of the nativity scene. Children may visit the animals after the performance.

Six music groups and a full orchestra, directed by Phil Munger, will present new and old carols and hymns. A donation of $3 per seat is asked.

At Casa Colina Hospital

Biofeedback box helps patients turn off tension

By MARY LOU AGUIRRE
Staff Writer

Twice a day, Art leaves his room at Casa Colina Hospital for Rehabilitative Medicine to listen to a box.

The 36-year-old La Verne man walks down the hall of the Pomona hospital to the biofeedback lab. He sits in a chair while a non-toxic gel is smeared on his forearms. Thin straps with a small square metal device are secured to his arms. Wires from the straps lead to the box.

The box, a biofeedback machine, emits a sound as it monitors Art's internal body activity.

"Basically biofeedback is a system in which the individual is given information about some particular body function. Without a machine, this information is not normally available," said Edward M. Green, director of the hospital's biofeedback laboratory.

There are several diffferent functions that the biofeedback machine can measure. Art has worked with a GSR (galvanic skin response) and EM (electromyograph) machines. The GSR box is sensitive to anxiety levels and thought processes. EM detects muscle tension.

"Theoretically, any system of your body that I can measure and give you feedback or information about, you could control," said Green. "Because of the way the brain is wired in the nervous system, once we give you that information, the brain is able to control that system."

Art is in his fifth week of biofeedback therapy. "To me it is a way of relieving the pain I had. A complete relaxation of my body," said Art. He has learned to control his muscle tension to minimize back pain.

Green said that there is no "cookbook recipe" on how patients control internal body systems.

"Muscle tension is when the brain is anxious about something or when you're worrying about the future. The brain deals with this and generates a lot of electrical activity. That excess activity translates from the nervous system to the stomach and there is a general tightening that occurs," said Green.

"All we do is show (patients) this, give them some measurement. We tell them to do whatever they do to relax, calm their body down. Solve no problems, don't think about anything in particular, " said Green.

When "connected" to a biofeedback machine, a patient begins to experience their body. The machine picks the tension level and makes a noise. When the body relaxs, the box quiets.

"Specifically, what patients are looking to do, when the box becomes quieted and indicates that tension is gone, is to determine 'How do I feel emotionally?'" said Green.

Green said that after a while the patient begins to make an emotional association with how they felt when they are relaxed.

"They create a concrete image of relaxation, based on that association. They get an awareness of how they feel when the box is quiet. Then they zero in on that feeling and practice that," said Green.

Art said that when he first used the machine it was difficult for him to relax.

"Before I came here my muscles were tense. Now I can sit down and relax my body and make the pain go away. I can slow my heartbeat and relax my muscles. Everyday I'll be using biofeedback. The difference is that I won't be using the machine. By the time I leave here, I'll be able to do it by myself," said Art.

"What we want to do is de-emphasis the machinery and emphasis that (patients) are in control. The box is a training tool. Once you learn to relax, you don't need it. Our goal is the teach them to get in tune with their body and to be in control of it," said Green.

Green said that there are several reasons why some people might not be successful in using biofeedback.

"The majority of people can experience success with biofeedback. Individuals who are afraid of being in charge or who have not been allowed to be in control of their life have difficulty. Some people don't want control, others fight it. They don't want to respond," said Green.

There are also medical reasons. A person with a impairment of their nervous system or one who lacks the mental ability to understand, would be unable to use biofeedback.

Meanwhile, Green said that work is being done with epileptic patients to decrease the frequency of seizures. Biofeedback can be used to give them a sense of control and relaxation.

"It is not a cure-all. There is a lot of mysticism that this is a new frontier in treatment. It doesn't do anything other than put the person in touch with their body. It is no wonder miracle." said Green.

Publications like "Psychology Today" sell biofeedback equipment in their ads. But Green said that there is a "tremendous danger" in people using biofeedback machines without skilled, professional help.

"The dangers are simply the same as that of a person buying a scalple, giving themselves local anesthetic and starting to cut. A person might not know how to use it or what to use it for. They also may not have the proper expectations," said Green.

Casa Colina has been using biofeedback therapy for seven years. The biofeedback lab services several different hospital programs. The chronic back pain program that Art is in, consists of 12-14 hours of therapy. The hospital's spinal cord injuries, head trauma and stroke patients all use biofeedback as part of therapy.

"Biofeedback is not something used indiscriminately. My role is supervising who gets it, for how long, and what type of system is used. Sometimes a patient is referred and I'll decide if they need it (biofeedback treatment) or if they need something else," said Green.

"There is an interesting type of person that we sometimes see here. It is someone who has totally divorced their body and their mind. When you hook up the various detecting devices, there is almost no response. I usually recommend further psychological therapy to get them aware of this estrangement. Later we can use some biofeedback with them," said Green.

Art said that at first he was skeptical about biofeedback. "I couldn't understand what was happening. As the days went by and they told me about it, I began to understand what I was suppose to do. I guess I thought it was a hoax," said Art.

"A majority of people may be skeptical because they have a minimal contact with electronics. Another reason is that they're afraid that there is some kind of shock or pain. What I do initially is to simply reassure them that there is no pain, no electricity and no drugs. They are afraid that the box is going to do something to them or hurt them," said Green.

"Another thing they are skeptical about is control. They don't think they can control their pain or muscles. A majority of people are passively involved with their health. They can tell you how many hours they spend at work, but not how many hours of the day they invest in their health. They don't see health as something they invest in regularly. The idea of biofeedback is a 'way out' concept to some," said Green.

National and state biofeedback organizations are currently attempting to establish guidelines to regulate the use of biofeedback.

"There is need for consumer education in biofeedback. Avoid individuals that make extreme promises about biofeedback. Avoid those who use excessive amounts of equipment. The public should look for medical experience and some credentials in physiology and psychology. There are some people with no background who are using it to make a quick buck," warned Green.

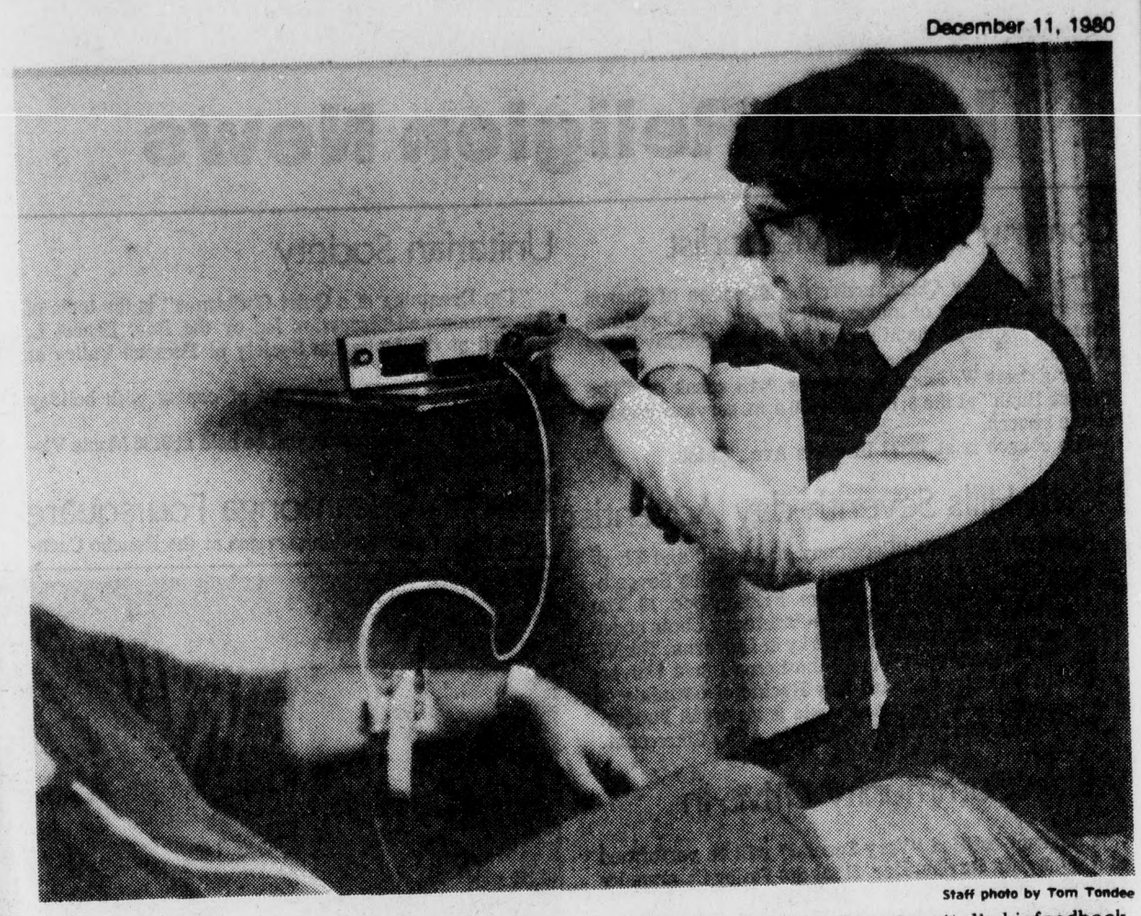

"As more people with credentials and reputability utilize biofeedback, the general public will feel that there is more to it. The future is tremedous for biofeedback, " said Green.

"With health care cost going the way they are amd greater economic scrunity, the need for cheaper more effective appoaches for helping people get well will be in demand," said Green.

In two weeks Art will have completed his biofeedback therapy.

"Now at home, if things get to be too much, I excuse myself and go to my room. I relax and take it easy. When I come back out, the kids don't seem to understand my change from Dr. Jekyll to Mr. Hyde," said Art.

Claremont well still flowing

The city of Claremont's long battle with an overflowing artesian well has not been won despite the appearance of victory, officials reported.

Since last May, countless gallons of artesian well water have been flowing from a field south of the Santa Fe railroad tracks into College Avenue and south about two blocks into a storm drain.

The result has made the eastern edge of College, its intersections with both Green Street and Kirkwood Avenue, and private driveways along the way extremely slippery and dangerous.

The partial victory resulted when city crews recently managed to divert the water into a manhole. This slowed the College Avenue flow to a trickle. But the drainage has not been completely stopped.
